

What is the Early Help Assessment?

The Early Help Assessment is a way of working with you to identify what the needs are and how you and your family can be best supported.

Agencies will talk to each other and work together with you and help to co-ordinate the support that has been identified by the assessment which will lead to a family Early Help Plan.

What is the assessment about?

When we carry out the assessment with you, we will ask you some questions and talk to you and your family. We will talk about what is working well in your family, what you and other people are worried about and what may need to happen next.

What happens next?

Based on what you tell us we will find the best people to support and help you. We will arrange to get together with you and these people to talk about what to do next. This will be at a time and place to suit you.

Someone will be chosen as your main worker (we call this a "lead practitioner") and they will help coordinate the assessment and the plan.

With your agreement, the different agencies involved will talk to each other. This will mean that you won't have to keep telling people the same things over and over again and you will be kept fully involved by one main person.

We hope that you will find this approach helpful

The Early Help assessment will:

- Help you and your family get the right support sooner
- Work together with you and agencies that can help

How will my information be shared?
